Black may be a staple in many wardrobes, but it seems we also love this colour in our homes. It is smart, sophisticated, dramatic, masculine, moody and urbane, and the many subtle shades from the Resene palette are increasingly popping up in living rooms, bedrooms and even bathrooms. As with any dark colour, black will make a room appear smaller and more enclosed, so it's superb for a room that's more likely to be used in the evening, such as a media or TV room, or a bedroom. Try Resene Blackboard Paint for a shot of black you can also use as a chalkboard. Lighting can heighten the effect of black, by casting a wash of soft light over a wall or even diffusing sunlight through sheer curtains. Black is also a popular option for exteriors. It lends a crisp contemporary edge to modern architecture, or a romantic cast to bungalows and cottages, especially when teamed with white architraves and joinery. SHINING BRIGHT

A light touch with contrasting colours and you'll soon be the cool kids on the block.

From warm tones to stark styles, white has great potential. With so many shades and different temperatures to choose from, knowing which paint will suit your walls takes an educated eye. A good place to start when selecting whites is the temperature. Imagine brighter tones are like an ice-cold glass of water – drinking this gives you a refreshing surge of energy. In contrast, a warmer white is like a mug of tea – less stimulating but very comforting. The white you choose needs to reflect the area you're painting. In bedrooms, a warmer, creamy hue may be best. The cooler tones of blue-, grey- and green-based whites are better for spaces where you'll be wide awake and active. If you find your choices are clashing with existing paintwork and it's tricky to imagine going lighter, paint a coat of white over the surface. This will give you a clean slate so you can choose a new colour without distractions. Available from Resene ColorShops and resellers: resene.co.nz, 0800 737 363.
